Abstract
This presentation will give a broad overview of ethical principles pertaining to the care of elderly patients, then focus on the specific topic of ethical issues related to caring for elderly patients with dementia. The principle of respect for human dignity will be introduced and considered in light of impairments to central capabilities and functioning occurring in patients with various stages of dementia. Case-based analysis and discussion will illustrate these broad principles and concepts.